A practical guide to campgrounds, dumpstations, and propane services along Alaska's highways

Welcome to Alaska!

Whether you arrived here via the Alaska Highway or the Marine Highway system, or flew here and are now renting a recreational vehicle, you probably have already found the north country a little different. In keeping with the spirit of the “Last Frontier,” you will find RV amenities a bit simpler than you are used to, and commercial facilities located many miles apart. But challenges add to the adventure of exploring this great state. Here are a few tips on RVing in Alaska, plus locations of three important services for RVs: campgrounds, dump stations, and propane sources.

Enjoy your visit!

Highway names

One of the first things to strike you in Alaska is the friendly way we refer to our highways—they all have names, as well as numbers. When you ask directions to Highway 3, you will probably get a blank stare, and perhaps an, “I don’t know, where are you going?” Learning the names will simplify life! Most of the roads follow the historic trails of the early gold miners and pioneers, and were named for them. Watch for small signs with numbers along the roads—these are “mileposts” that indicate mileage along the road.

Alaska Marine Highway

In addition to the road network, there is a ferry system that gives access to the communities in Southeast Alaska. Map “E” of this TIPS series portrays the major cities along the ferry route. The Whittier/Valdez route that links with the Alaska Railroad system is particularly popular. For a complete listing of cities and ferry routes, consult The Milepost. Be aware that reservations for RV space on the ferry system are usually required in advance of your travel. If you are willing to travel counter-seasonally (like heading south in June or North in August), then you will find abundant space.

Dump and water stations

Dump stations and sources of potable water are often many miles apart along the highway system, especially in the more out-of-the-way areas. Dump station locations known as of December 1996 are identified on RV TIPS maps. The majority of dump stations located outside of the larger cities use a septic tank/drainage field system to dispose of waste. To prevent overloading these systems, please use the dump stations in larger communities that have sewage treatment facilities. Facilities with dump stations may require purchase of their services or may charge a user fee. Know the limits of your vehicle and plan ahead.

Repairs

Since repair facilities are widely spaced, especially on the more remote highways, it is wise to carry some of the basics to get you back on the road in the event of vehicle damage or a breakdown. Spare tires, fan belts, heater hose, electrical fuses, “hundred mile an hour tape” (ask any Alaskan about duct tape!), extra oil, tow strap or chain, small water bucket and flares are some of the general items you should carry. Major repair facilities for RVs are limited to Anchorage and Fairbanks; however, many facilities in the smaller communities can perform minor repairs.

Litter and trash disposal

Please use the numerous trash disposal receptacles along Alaska’s highways. Whenever possible, save and dispose of trash in Fairbanks, Anchorage and other large communities along your route that have landfill sites.

Information Centers

Most communities have visitor information centers. Some are run by convention and visitors bureaus and some are run by local chambers of commerce. There are Alaska Public Land Information Centers (APLIC) in Tok, Anchorage, Fairbanks and Ketchikan. These interagency centers provide a wealth of information about Alaska, places to go and things to do on state and federal recreation lands. The APLICs are a “must stop” on your visit.

Wildlife

Alaska offers abundant opportunities to view wildlife and wild lands. However, to see a lot of wildlife, you will need to be up early in the morning or late at night. Watch the mountains for sheep and the valley meadows for moose. Foxes, coyotes, porcupines, ground squirrels and numerous birds can be seen along highways, and beavers and waterfowl around rivers and ponds. With luck, you may see a wolf or bear. Watch for the binocular logo that identifies wildlife interpretive sites. Respect wild animals and give them lots of space; females with young can be especially dangerous. Do not feed or disturb wildlife. You can reduce the nuisance of mosquitoes and other biting insects by using a repellent with 100% DEET (diethyltoluimide) content.

Giardia

Giardia lamblia is a tiny parasite found in freshwater lakes and streams throughout Alaska. Its cysts are passed into water sources most frequently through the feces of animals such as beaver and muskrats, but can come from other mammals. If ingested, the parasite can cause Giardiasis (beaver fever), which creates a great deal of misery for several weeks with intense cramps, bloating, diarrhea and muscular weakness. Be cautious of water obtained from sources other than approved potable water supplies. Boiling water for several minutes is the surest way to purify it, however, there are several commercial filters and chemicals available that can be used.

Medical and safety

The booklet, Help Along the Way, is a must for every RVer and is available at the visitor centers. Carry a well-stocked first aid kit at all times. In the event of a serious accident or medical emergency, contact emergency services through the 911 Hotline.

Camp Sites

At times during the peak tourist season, RV campgrounds may become extremely crowded. If you are unable to obtain a suitable location or would like assistance in finding a site, please contact any commercial campground owner. The Alaska State Troopers maintain a list of alternate “camping” sites for emergencies. The Anchorage and Fairbanks Convention and Visitor Bureaus are also good sources of campsite information. The Anchorage number is 257-2351; Fairbanks is 456-5774.

Dalton Highway

You may drive the 497 miles from Fairbanks to Deadhorse to within 3 miles of the Arctic Ocean. Commercial tours are then available through the oilfields to the ocean.

Words of caution about the Dalton Highway: it is heavily traveled by commercial haulers serving the trans-Alaska Pipeline System. The road is gravel-surfaced and may be either extremely dusty or extremely muddy, depending on the whims of the weather. There are two repair facilities and the only medical assistance is a first-aid room at the Arctic Inn in Coldfoot. There is no dump station on the Dalton. Please empty your tank in Fairbanks and plan on carrying your load until you return to Fairbanks. A CB radio is invaluable! Be sure to seek information in Fairbanks prior to this adventure! Call the Alaska Department of Transportation and Public Facilities at 1-800-478-7675 for statewide information on weather and road conditions (see Weather and Road Conditions heading).

Alaska Vehicle Regulations

Automobile liability insurance is mandatory in Canada and Alaska. The use of seat belts and child seats is required by law. The maximum allowable speeds are 65 mph on some state, paved roads; and 50 mph on graveled roads, unless otherwise posted. When driving on the highway, please keep your headlights on at all times. In some places it is required; in all places it makes sense!

Wildfire in Alaska

Summer is also fire season in Alaska. It is not uncommon to observe smoke from wildfires, especially during severe dry periods. Because of the state’s large size and lack of an extensive road network, remote fires are detected, fought and supported with aircraft. In an average year, over half a million acres will burn. Although most large fires are started by lightning, carelessness also takes its toll. Do your part in preventing wildfires by maintaining a safe campfire and being sure all coals are dead out.

Recreational Mining

Most folks visiting Alaska want to try their hand at liberating some golden flakes from our rivers and streams. It is true that most water-ways will show some “color,” but you can be assured that any valuable land is already claimed. Check land ownership before get-ting out the gold pan, because panning is allowed on some public lands but not on others. Permission must be obtained from legal mining claim holders before entering a claim to pan. Claim-jumpers are not looked upon favorably! If gold fever is overwhelming you, however, the visitor centers can give you leads on where to go.

Good luck!

Remember to “buckle up” — it’s the law!
